

Proyecto Surcos para la Promoción de la Salud Asociación Civil

Narrative:

Surcos is a non-profit civil association that develops and implements community health strategies that contribute to improving the living conditions of vulnerable communities in Argentina.

Surcos Commitment:

In Argentina, like other Latin American countries, the level of management closest to the population is the municipal level, where decision-makers do not necessarily have the necessary tools for a comprehensive approach. By 2025, we hope to have strengthened municipal approaches to sexual and reproductive health in at least 18 municipalities in Argentina, with a rights-based, gender-based, and participatory intercultural approach.

Currently, in a context of increasing hate speech, patriarchal discourse, denial of femicides, and gender-based violence, it is necessary to reinforce the perspective of rights, gender, and intercultural approaches. To do so, we hope to train 3,000 people from the community and 900 people representing professionals, technicians, workers, and managers/decision-makers on these issues in the next three years.

Objectives:

- 18 municipalities strengthened with a rights-based, gender-based and intercultural participatory approach in comprehensive management and resource management in sexual and reproductive health.
- 3,900 people trained on topics related to sexual and reproductive health, a rights-based, gender-based and intercultural perspective (3,000 people from the community, 870 representatives of professionals/technicians/workers, 30 managers and decision-makers).
